REMARKS OF THE HONORABLE REPRESENTATIVE EARL POMEROY

Good morning. Thank you for this opportunity to visit with you. Some of the experiences I had serving in the 1981 and 1983 legislative sessions are among the best experiences I have had in my career. It is good to be back. I also have a clear idea about the difficult work you have before you in the final days of this session, so I will get right to the point I want to discuss with you this morning.

In the past few weeks I have been crisscrossing North Dakota rushing from one disaster area to another. I have never seen a time when so many of our citizens have faced disaster threats--from Pembina to Mott, Minot to Wahpeton, and so many places in between.

Yesterday I toured flooded areas with Governor Hoeven and Major General David Sprynczynatyk. The view from the Black Hawk helicopter was incredible--water, water everywhere. Our ditches are streams, our streams are rivers, and our rivers have become lakes. In past weeks, unseasonably cold weather played an important role along the Red River, freezing water in fields at the height of the record crest in Fargo, preventing a bad situation from getting worse. Now, however, rain and 24-hour melting conditions, including temperatures in the 60s, have caused the lingering snowpack to let loose with a vengeance. Record flows are causing record floods, as the national news coverage this morning of my hometown, Valley City, indicates.

Valley City is in a very, very tough fight today, and Mayor Mary Lee Nielson just announced a voluntary evacuation of vulnerable adults and flood prone areas up to the level of the 500-year flood plain--involving a significant portion of the town. The Mayor told me these steps, along with the contingency dike lines being built behind some of the temporary levees, are not in any way an indication certain parts of the town are being abandoned in this flood fight. Rather, she expressed absolute determination to win this battle for each of the town's neighborhoods. The voluntary evacuation will greatly assist in clearing streets for the emergency dike repairs which inevitably will develop in the days of high water ahead.

Valley City will be assisted immeasurably by the Governor's commitment of significantly more National Guard soldiers and the presence of senior Corps of Engineers leadership along with levee experts brought in from around the country.

As with Fargo and our other disaster communities, we salute the dedicated leadership and federal resources brought to bear in this fight.

But we know the heart of the effort comes down to the people themselves as they step up, bear down, and work furiously--neighbor helping neighbor--in the struggle to save their homes and communities.

That's the thing about North Dakota. When the chips are down, we all pull together. And this is not simply some closely held opinion by me or by you. The televised coverage of the extraordinary fight that has been waged--literally across our entire state--as our people have responded to this very challenging spring has moved millions. In the Halls of Congress, colleague after colleague have expressed their concerns even as they admired the heroic efforts being waged to protect our communities.

President Obama expressed the impressions of our nation in a recent Saturday radio address which featured the disaster threat and response in our region. He said, "At moments like these we are reminded of the power of nature to disrupt lives and endanger communities. But we are also reminded of the power of individuals to make a difference. In the face of incredible challenge, the people of these communities have rallied in support of one another. And their service isn't just inspirational--it's integral to our response. It's also a reminder of what we can achieve when Americans come together to serve their communities. In facing sudden crises, or more stubborn challenges, the truth is we are all in this together as neighbors and fellow citizens." That is what brought so many to help in North Dakota and Minnesota and other areas affected by the flooding.

Some may see images of snow, rain, mud, sand, and water and say to themselves--"Why would anyone want to live there?!" But to each of us who have played our respective part in this fight and experienced the strength of our community, mobilized together, shoulder to shoulder, helping one another, we think--"Why would anyone want to live anywhere else?"

We will never be able to adequately thank our young people who have turned out by the thousands to form the backbone of the flood fight. Millions of sandbags were filled and placed. As we've worked with them we know two things very clearly--we couldn't have done it without them; and, if we give them the tools they need, they will go on to make our communities and our state stronger and better. I guess maybe there's a third thing we've learned for the older ones of us--we learned that we weren't quite as young as we were the last flood fight!

We will also never be able to thank adequately the men and women of the North Dakota National Guard. Nearly 2,000 Guardsmen are on duty this morning battling this week's dangerous crests. In all, more than 2,400 Guardsmen and Airmen have participated, filling nearly four and a half million sandbags statewide, keeping close watch on dozens and dozens of miles of emergency dikes, and directing traffic so the dike building and reinforcing never grinds to a stop. At Sandbag Central in Fargo late one night, I told the soldier next to me in the line that we all felt mighty good having our soldiers back here in our sand instead of sands far away. He just smiled and said, "Roger that, Sir!"

Having lived this flood fight for several weeks now, I've seen more examples of citizen heroism than I can begin to recount, but the impressions will be with me always--scenes like last night in LaMoure where Governor Hoeven and I visited a swarming Sandbag Central as waters crept toward the edges of that small town. The Mayor told us they put out the word on the radio at 5:30 and by 6:00 production was going full bore. Volunteers told me they dropped their plans for the evening and came forward to help. Making this even more incredible was the fact they were now into their third week of this hard work, offered freely for the good of the community.

In our largest fight this spring--where Fargo fought the Red River--it is estimated 80,000-100,000 people volunteered, an all-time record; and when this is all done, that is going to be the record of which I am most proud.

Just as notable as our citizen volunteers coming forward in emergencies are the citizen leaders who guide and enhance our communities through their virtually volunteer service. Our state has 357 mayors, 1,800 township board members, 223 county commissioners, and last but not least 141 state legislators. The people of this state are blessed to have you and all the dedicated men and women who share a love of our state and a determination to move it forward by playing leadership roles in our communities.

Dealing with the snows and floods of 2009 has demonstrated a lot about how different levels of government need to relate to one another to form the optimal response for the citizens we serve.

For example, we have seen where local issues are involved, local decisionmakers are the best positioned policymakers to make the call. Local officials know local matters best. For example, when federal officials challenged Fargo's flood planning, Fargo officials stuck to their guns and subsequent events have proved them right. No one knows Fargo flood fighting better than Mayor Denny Walaker, and the same holds true for leaders all across the state.

On the other hand, while decisionmaking should be kept local as possible, when disaster strikes, it will require more than local resources to protect against the threat and then to restore normalcy when the threat has passed. We have seen that time and time again up here on the high plains. The Corps of Engineers and FEMA have been such vital partners to our efforts. This spring we were relieved when the Presidential Declaration of disaster was issued, and again last Friday when the White House announced the disaster recovery would include individual assistance.

Each day this week, some number of our citizens will abandon their efforts to save their homes from these relentless flood waters. Thank goodness they will know there will be some federal help to assist them in putting their property and their lives back in order.

And the toll of all this on our shared public infrastructure is truly staggering. In Ramsey County local officials told the Governor and me that there were 150 road closings due to washouts and flooding--36 in one township alone!

Most of the cost of the infrastructure pounding will fall upon the federal government. Senator Conrad, Senator Dorgan, and I will work closely with Governor Hoeven to make certain we receive the maximum amount of federal assistance possible. For example, we are hopeful and confident the federal cost-share will be 90% for qualifying public expenditures under FEMA. However, just as I have advised many homeowners that FEMA assistance and SBA loans can never make one entirely whole after a loss, the same is true for political subdivisions--our cities, counties, and townships.

After depleting budgets dealing with the record snows of winter, the local cost-share--even at 10%--will be hard or impossible for some to come up with. Also, some repairs may not qualify for FEMA payments, but our strapped subdivisions have no choice but to repair. I applaud you for voting to help with snow removal costs. This is a very good start.

In a disaster, government works best when each layer listens respectfully to the others, along the principle I described earlier, "Local folks know local issues best." That means at the Federal level and at the State level we must pay attention to our political subdivisions. They will inform us on how to fight the disaster, how to mitigate the risk of reoccurrence when the disaster is passed, and what to look out for in the future.

For example, the South side flood protection in Fargo is a locally developed proposal which would significantly reduce the prospects of this spring's threat from reoccurring in the future. We should fund it.

And listening to local leaders like County Commissioner Joe Belford in Ramsey County alerts us to the very difficult work that lies ahead in dealing with the continuing flood from the inexorably rising Devils Lake. The weather service now predicts a 100% certainty a record lake level will be reached when runoff is complete.

There's a vision I have when it comes to helping political subdivisions. It's the view of a sandbag line where each person shares the lift with the one next to them--a scene repeated innumerable times this spring and occurring right at this moment in our most threatened communities.

The Federal government must play the most significant financial role by far. Just as we have assisted other disaster areas, like fires and hurricanes, in the recent past, we will now require--and thanks to the Presidential disaster declarations, we will receive--tens of millions, perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars to help us recover.

In listening to bipartisan voices from this session, I am hopeful the state will also take extraordinary steps to help our cities, counties, and townships. In the sandbag line, they don't leave the smallest participant holding a bag bigger than they can handle. Working across lines of government, I know we can help our political subdivisions get through these daunting challenges they face.

Wrapping up any legislative session is a very difficult matter, as I remember well from my own time as a member of the legislature representing Valley City and Barnes County. Clearly the work before you this time--as unprecedented disasters continue to unfold from east to west and the needs grow daily--make your work these last two weeks as challenging as it could be.
